

Notes on Statistical Questions

A statistical question is a question whose answer contains some VARIABILITY. That is, it can be different from student to student, and still be correct.

For example, “What is the favorite sport for the members of this class?” Since answers could be different, it is a statistical question.

On the other hand, the question “What is your age?” is not statistical since there is only one right answer since I am asking only student.